

I am writing to state my desire to have the Indiana no-call list law remain as it presently exists. I "DO NOT" want my bank or credit card companies to be able to call me when they want. They can use the U.S. Mail or the internet. I pay for the use of the phone service and I do not want these companies to have access to me whenever they want. The fact that I choose to do business with them, does not give them the right to invade my privacy when they want. I have the right now to choose when I want to deal with correspondence from them. If the law is changed, I will lose the right to control this aspect of my life. They only want this change because it is a cheaper way for them to push their products on me. My wife has a credit card in her own name and she feels the same way about this issue. Please do not allow the greed of these companies to have preference over my right to privacy. Thank you
